WHAT A WAR WOULD DO.

A cable from London yesterday announced that the people of England are growing uneasy over the Franco-Russian alliance, believing that it is aimed more particularly at England than at Germany. Probably the thought of how vulnerable Great Britain is in many places is what has awakened that impression. She is occupying Egypt today under deception, and it is clear first, that France feels that with exceeding keenness, because France built that canal with the hope of gaining largely in trade and of opening colonies in the Orient. Russia still nurses her dream of building a capital on the Hellespont, and it would be perfectly natural for France and Russia to go into an alliance with the understanding that one should have Turkey in case of a successful conquest, and the other Egypt. They both cordially hate Great Britain. They are both fighting nations. Their combined navies would stand off England's great navy very well, while when it comes to land fighting they have five soldiers to England's one. The dispatch looks to be a sensible one, and while every man on this side of the sea grieves to see those three nations at war, and, by the way, were they to go to war Germany would have to take a hand, still, we believe the effect of it would be good on our country. Up to date England bulldozes the world. She is a bruiser from away back, and by her wealth more than by her power, she has captured the Eastern portion of our continent, until the men there who handle the Nation's finances never sneeze any more, unless a few money-changers in London take snuff. There is a great deal in the joke told of the New York dude, who, in the sunshine, walked with his pantaloons rolled up in New York, and gave as a reason that it was raining in London. There has been too much of that rolling up of American pantaloons because of cloudy days in London, and a mighty war would change that. The great bane of our country today is that in the great Eastern centers the people are losing their American independence of thought, and they have stood with their backs to their own country and their eyes straining across the sea until they are only half Americans now, and some great shock is needed to shake them out of their false position.—Salt Lake Tribune.

A JUDICIAL CZAR.

The latest American Czar has been discovered in Arizona, and his name is Sloan. A dispatch dated from Phoenix, Arizona yesterday, tells the story of Judge Sloan's crime against the people and the Constitution of the United States: "In the District Court today Frank King, city editor of the Phoenix Gazette, was fined $100 and ordered committed to the County Jail for thirty days. Some days since King wrote an editorial for the Gazette in which he referred to the Court as the Cameron Court, and cast other reflections upon Judge Sloan's tribunal. He was cited to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and the case came up today." In this case Judge Sloan was the aggrieved party and the prosecuting witness; he was also the Judge, the jury, and the executioner. Suppose that Mr. King had told the truth in his article reflecting upon the Judge, and there is no evidence to the contrary, the inference is unavoidable that the power of the Court was used illegally to punish an innocent man. If the article which Mr. King wrote was false, Judge Sloan had a right to have him arrested for criminal libel, and tried before another and unprejudiced Court. Judge Sloan's action has laid him open to the suspicion of being a judicial scoundrel.

Four inches of snow fell in the Palouse Valley, Washington, Saturday. Thousands of acres of wheat are still standing, and many farmers have been thrashed. The damage will be immense.
